Market Basket customers hungry as resolution nears

Chelsea. Aisles remain barely stocked as tensions within the company entered its fifth week.

Shoppers and employees were scarce at Market Basket's Chelsea location on Monday. / NICOLAUS CZARNECKI, METRO

After more than a month of passionate picketing and a tedious behind-the-scenes standoff, an end to the Market Basket saga may be within reach.

Massachusetts Gov. Deval Patrick joined forces with New Hampshire Gov. Maggie Hassan late Sunday night to help broker a deal between ousted CEO Arthur T. Demoulas and the company's board of directors, helmed by his cousin and apparent archnemesis Arthur S. Demoulas.

"The parties have made real progress on the terms of the sale and operating control of the company, and the governors are encouraged that a resolution may be within reach," Heather Nichols, a spokeswoman for Patrick, said in an email Monday.

Protests continued on Friday despite a deadline for picketing employees, who are loyal to Arthur T., to return to work or risk losing their jobs.

Monday, as the company entered its fifth week of unrest, there were no visible signs that things were on the upswing, but shoppers and workers were hopeful.

"The regular employees are back to work, the part-timers are not," said William Caraballo, a merchandising manager at the Chelsea Market Basket. "We're just doing the best we can. Everybody is still out."

Caraballo said customers are "devastated, and are starting to wonder what this is leading to."

Janette Benitez, of Chelsea, is one of those customers.

Benitez pushed a cart through the store's deserted aisles yesterday, and spoke of her loyalty to the chain and her disappointment with the higher ups.

"I think that it's kind of pathetic that they're doing this back and forth thing," Benitez said. "I think it's time they come to a deal and just settle it because the customers are the ones who are suffering."

Like many Market Basket customers, Benitez said she is drawn to the store's low prices and food selection.

"I've been to PriceRite, and I don't like their food; it rots in two days," she said. "The Spanish people eat a lot of different things, and the only place you can find it is here. I just wish they'd make up their minds and settle it and stop being so immature."

As of Monday much of the store's regular food items were nowhere to be seen, a problem that will likely only be worsened with Boston Sword & Tuna's decision to end its decade-long relationship with the embattled grocer.

The fish vendor's CEO, Tim Malley, released a letter on Facebook on Monday announcing the dissolution, which he blamed on problems with Market Basket management.

"We think the time has nearly run out for saving this great institution and all those who depend on it," Malley said.

Market Basket trucker charged with assault

Market Basket truck driver Ira Forbes, 27, claimed in a Lowell court Monday that picketing employees yelled racial slurs at him when he approached them with a hammer at the company's Tewksbury headquarters Friday.

- The Brooklyn, New York, resident faced charges of disorderly conduct and assault with a dangerous weapon. A defense attorney said Forbes felt threatened by the protesters when they blocked his truck.
- Forbes was released on personal recognizance.

Chinatown. Man charged in quadruple shooting

A man on federal probation for a firearms charge was held on $1 million cash bail at his arraignment Monday on charges that he shot four men in Chinatown early Sunday morning.

Kareen Smith, 29, of Malden, faces charges of armed assault with intent to murder and assault and battery with a dangerous weapon in connection to the nonfatal shooting.

Boston Police initially named Melvin Smith, 27, of Mattapan as the suspect, however, on Monday a Suffolk DA spokesman said Kareen Smith was arraigned on the charges.

Allston man arraigned in crash that killed couple

Back Bay. Mohamed Alfageeh is accused of vehicle homicide and negligent driving.

A 30-year-old Allston convenience store owner pleaded not guilty on Monday to charges related to a Back Bay crash that killed a couple in June.

Mohamed Alfageeh was arraigned in Suffolk Superior Court on two charges of motor vehicle homicide and one charge of negligent operation of a motor vehicle for the deaths of Jessica Campbell, 27, and John Lanzillotti, 28, both of Brookline.

Assistant District Attorney Gregory Henning claimed multiple witnesses saw Alfageeh run a red light while the couple was in a crosswalk.

Witnesses said the two were holding hands and had a walk signal when Alfageeh's SUV slammed into another car, causing his vehicle to skid through the crosswalk and strike the pair.

Lanzillotti, who worked for the Boston Red Sox, died at the scene and Campbell was rushed to Brigham and Women's Hospital where she later died. Members of both victims' families were present at the arraignment.

Alfageeh is due in court for a pre-trial conference on Sept. 22.

Nantucket. Man's fatal dive ruled as accidental

The 27-year-old former Boston College hockey player who died on Nantucket Island this weekend after raising $100,000 to fight ALS accidentally drowned, the state medical examiner's office said on Monday.

Authorities did not elaborate on what might have caused Corey Griffin to drown, or whether he had suffered other injuries. Police said Griffin dove into the water from the "Juice Guys" building on Straight Wharf around 2 a.m. Saturday, floated to the surface and then sank.

Griffin was a friend of Pete Frates, whose ALS diagnosis inspired the viral Ice Bucket Challenge to raise money for the The ALS Association.

Frates was one of many to offer sympathy in the wake of Griffin's untimely death, saying on Facebook: "Helping out was nothing new for Griff. He held his own event for me back in 2012, just a few months after diagnosis. He worked his butt off these last few weeks for ALS. We texted every day, planning and scheming ways to raise funds and plan events." GLOBE

Kenmore. Green Line derailment leads to evacuations and delays

Hundreds waited for delayed trains. @NILS_GEHLENBORG, TWITTER

An investigation is underway after a two-car outbound Green Line trolley derailed inside a tunnel near Kenmore Square around 9:45 a.m. on Monday, forcing passengers to walk through the tunnel to be evacuated.

No injuries were reported, according to Boston Fire, though one passenger needed assistance getting out of the tunnel.

Regular service was expected to resume today, according to MBTA spokeswoman Kelly Smith.

By Monday evening's commute, regular service had resumed on the C and D lines, but the B line continued to utilize shuttle buses through the end of service.

Not surprisingly, several customers expressed frustration with delays.

Around 2 p.m., Green Line passenger Ben Heyman tweeted, "Hey #Boston – #MBTA Green Line is still an utter mess. Avoid at all costs."

The Green Line is no stranger to accidents.

In March, 10 people were injured when a Riverside-bound trolley veered off the tracks, causing another trolley to stop short behind it. Dozens were hurt in November 2012 when one trolley crashed into another at Boylston Station.

Autopsy shows police officer shot Brown six times

Ferguson. The Brown family and protesters have called for the shooting officer's arrest for days.

An unarmed black teenager whose killing by a white police officer has set off a week of protests and rioting in Ferguson, Missouri, was struck by at least six bullets, a lawyer for the deceased's family said on Monday.

The path of one bullet indicates 18-year-old Michael Brown may have been lowering his head in surrender when the fatal shot hit, said Daryl Parks, the family's lawyer.

Many details surrounding the shooting remain unclear, and federal and local officials have yet to release their own autopsy report.

Parks said the autopsy results clearly showed that the police officer who killed Brown should be arrested. He presented the results at a press conference showing that one bullet hit Brown in the "very top of his head" and another that struck his head exited near his eye.

St. Louis County Police spokesman Brian Schellman did not respond to a query about why Officer Darren Wilson, 28, had not been arrested. The department is running a parallel investigation to one by the U.S. Department of Justice, which is evaluating the shooting for civil rights violations.

Police have said Wilson said Brown reached into a patrol car and struggled for his service gun when Wilson fired the initial shot.

The National Guard was deployed on Monday to try to restore calm to the area. REUTERS

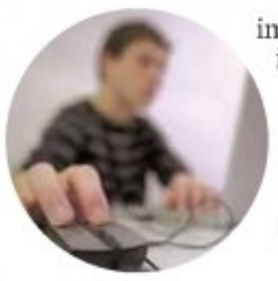
Hacking. Hospital patient data stolen in cyber attack from China



Community Health Systems Inc., one of the biggest U.S. hospital groups, said on Monday it was the victim of a cyber attack from China, resulting in the theft of Social Security numbers and other personal data belonging to 4.5 million patients. That would make the attack the largest of its type involving patient information since a U.S. Department of Health and Human Services website started tracking such breaches in 2009.

The previous record, an attack on a Montana Department of Public Health server, was disclosed in June and affected about 1 million people. REUTERS

Cost of raising a child in US tops $245,000

An average middle-income family in the United States can expect to spend about $245,000 over 18 years to raise a child born in 2013, the U.S. government estimated on Monday.

The Department of Agriculture's annual "Cost of Raising a Child" report showed costs — which reflect food, housing, childcare, education and other expenses — were up about 1.8 percent from 2012. REUTERS

WikiLeaks. Assange hopes to leave London embassy if UK lets him

WikiLeaks founder Julian Assange, who has spent over two years in Ecuador's London embassy to avoid a sex crimes inquiry in Sweden, said on Monday he planned to leave the building "soon," but Britain signaled it would still arrest him if he tried.

Assange made the surprise assertion during a news conference alongside Ecuador's Foreign Minister Ricardo Patino. But his spokesman played down the chances of an imminent departure, reportedly for health reasons, saying the British government would first need to revise its position and let him leave without arrest, something it has refused to do.

The 43-year-old Australian fled to the embassy in June 2012 to avoid extradition for questioning in Sweden over sex assault and rape allegations, which he denies. REUTERS

Liberia struggled on Monday to track down 17 suspected Ebola carriers who fled quarantine over the weekend, while the U.N. health agency urged affected West African nations to screen all departures in a bid to contain the worst outbreak of the virus.

In the Liberian capital Monrovia, police awaited a consignment of protective equipment before redeploying to West Point — a sprawling ocean-front shantytown — to reopen a quarantine center attacked by a rock-throwing crowd on Saturday, allowing patients, who had been isolated, to get away.

"We are very, very concerned about the situation," Information Minister Lewis Brown said, adding that 17 patients were still missing from the center, which was thoroughly looted.

Iraq

Kurds claim capture of strategic dam

Iraqi Kurdish forces said they recaptured Iraq's biggest dam from Islamist militants on Monday, as the United States launched air strikes to secure what has become a vital strategic objective in fighting that threatens to break up the country.

An employee at the site, however, said Islamic State fighters still held the Mosul Dam, giving them control over power and water supplies and where any breach of the vulnerable structure would threaten thousands of lives.

U.S. fighter, bomber and drone aircraft took part in the strikes on Islamic State positions near the dam, the Pentagon said. The strikes damaged or destroyed six armed vehicles, a light armored vehicle and other equipment. President Barack Obama said Iraqi and Kurdish forces had retaken the dam with U.S. help. REUTERS

1 More on J-Law and C-Mart

We can call Coldplay singer Chris Martin C-Mart, right? No? OK, maybe it does sound weird. Anyway, if you're like me, you're probably still confused about the whole Jennifer Lawrence dating Chris Martin thing. Lucky for us, The Sun is on the case, getting word from an anonymous source that Martin digs Lawrence because she's the opposite of Gwyneth Paltrow. And this source doesn't pull any punches: "Jennifer is loads of fun and they can't stop laughing when they are together. Chris feels he is dating someone who has everything he's been missing out on in the past 11 years," the source says. "Jennifer doesn't take herself too seriously, and when she is not filming she just wants to hang out and have a good time." But here's the thing: There isn't one person on the planet wondering why he would be attracted to her! She's Jennifer Lawrence, case closed. You got an anonymous source to explain the other half of the equation?

We understand why Chris Martin digs Jennifer Lawrence, but still aren't quite clear on how it works the other way around. / ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

2 Xtina gives birth to baby with XX chromosome

No, that's not some sort of disease, it was just a cleverish way of saying that Christina Aguilera gave birth over the weekend in Los Angeles to a daughter, her first with fiancé, Matt Rutler. Aguilera later took to Twitter to reveal the baby's name, tweeting, "So proud to welcome our beautiful daughter Summer Rain Rutler into the world." Aguilera also has a 6-year-old son, Max, with ex-husband Jordan Bratman. Of course, the real news here is that with the pregnancy no longer an issue, you can go back to criticizing the star of "The Voice" about her weight, you terrible, terrible people.

3 Chris Pratt before he was all that

Chris Pratt's campaign to melt the hearts of all he encounters continues. The "Guardians of the Galaxy" star recently posted a photo of himself from his days of being homeless in Hawaii, standing next to the Scooby Doo-emblazoned van he used to call home. "Can't believe I found this picture," he wrote on Facebook. "That is the van I lived in! In my hand is the script for the movie that got me out of Maui." Pratt previously told the Independent that he bummed around Maui working as a waiter at the Bubba Gump Shrimp Company before breaking into Hollywood.

Talking points

Was 'Expendables 3' just expendable?

The disappointing opening weekend box office results for "The Expendables 3" — a not very jacked $16.2 million — may be the most direct example yet of piracy having an impact on Hollywood, as a leaked copy of the action sequel went online three weeks before its release, resulting in more than 2.2 million downloads. "This is really a clear situation where this had an impact," BoxOffice.com's Phil Contrino tells Variety. "It's hard to measure, but the ripple effect — not only of the downloads but of the word-of-mouth that spread as a result — can be seen in the soft opening." But at least one rival executive thinks it had more to do with the movie just being bad: "There was some audience rejection," the unnamed exec says. "When you go to the well too many times, you're going to run out of gas."

Hey Biebs, no take-backs online

Justin Bieber still doesn't seem to understand that the Internet is forever. Continuing his habit of posting and then quickly deleting photos, Bieber uploaded an Instagram snap of himself and on-again, off-again girlfriend Selena Gomez clearly on again, with Gomez in Bieber's arms giving him a kiss. The attached caption? "Right now everything else is a blur." Speaking of blurs, the Biebs took the pic down just as quickly, but not before it could earn 216,553 likes — which, to be fair, is pretty low for Bieber.

‘Don’t judge a book by its cover’ isn’t a good phrase for Peter Mendelsund

At first glance.
The psychology behind designing a cover goes deeper than you may think.

The next time you’re casually perusing your local bookstore and a book catches your eye, chances are you can thank Peter Mendelsund. He’s designed sleeves for everything from “Ulysses” to “The Girl with the Dragon Tattoo.” Now, 300 of his top designs are showcased in his new book, “Cover.”

Even if a book jacket seems decorative, Mendelsund says there’s always something deeper there.

“Part of it is that I want to make something obscure enough so that on first viewing it doesn’t necessarily speak to you, but the cover comes along with you,” he explains. “There should ideally be some sort of moment when you’re reading and you see the cover again and say, ‘Oh, right!’”

In tandem with “Cover,” Mendelsund is also releasing a second book, “What We See When We Read,” about how readers visualize images as they read. When it came to designing the covers for his own books, Mendelsund says he had two totally different experiences.

“The idea for ‘Cover’ came to me instantly and just worked,” he says. “But for ‘What We See When We Read’ I could not come up with a cover for that forever and it was really a difficult, agonizing and grueling process.”

Even as the book industry continues to change and e-books continue to be popular, Mendelsund isn’t worried he’ll be out of a job anytime soon. “I keep waiting for e-books to affect my work, but it hasn’t,” he says. “That’s been one of the wonderful and surprising things: People still love reading physical books. I keep getting asked to make them.”

PETER MENDELSUND IS RELEASING TWO BOOKS, “WHAT WE SEE WHEN WE READ” AND “COVER.” GEORGE BAIER IV

Q&A

On ‘What We See When We Read’

Have celebrities played a role in readers’ visualizations?
In terms of movie adaptations, definitely. I think whenever an adaptation is made of a book, being able to see something in the ocular sense crowds out all the other [visualizations of characters] you might imagine until you forget, which sometimes takes years. Sometimes it never happens. I read “Harry Potter” with my kids, and there’s no way I’m getting those [actors] out of my brain.

Does race play a part in how people visualize characters?
We tend to colonize books with what we’re familiar with and make characters we can identify with, and we identify with those who are most similar to us. ... It may also have to do with what you’re reading as well. We tend to read books that speak to our particular little daily wicks.

Alexander Ludwig is a football star in "When the Game Stands Tall," out Friday. / TRACY BENNETT

Quoted

Put me in front of the Patriots ... and I wouldn't stand a chance." Ludwig

Introduction. Meet a former child actor who's now playing a football titan in "When the Game Stands Tall."

He had no history with football

"I grew up in Vancouver, Canada, so I basically played every sport but football. When I came to New Orleans to film this movie, I didn't know a thing about it; I basically learned it from scratch. I had to learn about it as quickly as possible. Now I'm in love with the sport."

Did he get good in real life?

"I think I could hold my own. Put me in front of the New England Patriots, though, and I wouldn't stand a chance."

Doing his own stunts

"I wanted to do as much as I could on the field, to make it look as real as possible. There were times when it was strenuous. You get your bruises here and there."

Shooting football every day

"Physically, this was the hardest movie I've ever done. We were in New Orleans shooting football every day. It was hot and exhausting. But then you go behind the camera and see what movie you're making, and you see how amazing it looks. This is going to be the best football anyone's seen in a film. Football is the star of this movie."

On having noted movie bad guy Clancy Brown play his scary dad

"He is one of the sweetest guys I've ever met, but he is terrifying when you're filming a scene with him. I love working with actors who get really physical and try to make it as real as possible. He had no problem doing that with me. We had a great bond that way."

It's all about the story

"It's great when you can do a movie and get a workout at the same time. But what drew me to the project was the story. I'd never read anything like it. I did 'Lone Survivor,' which was really action-packed. But there, too, it wasn't that it was a physically demanding role. I don't want to do some cheesy thing because it has action. I want to care about the story."

Phasing out of younger roles

"With 'Vikings,' it's been great because I get to really show some range and dive into the character. That's what I live for."

The facts

Alexander Ludwig

Where you've seen him: A child actor who was in "Race to Witch Mountain" and "The Seeker," he transitioned to older roles — after taking a break for college — with the villainous Cato in "The Hunger Games."

Where he is now: Playing a star high school quarterback with a monstrous father (Clancy Brown) in the football movie "When the Game Stands Tall."

Where he's going: He's reprising the role of Bjorn Ragnarsson on the next season of "Vikings," and he's second billed in the thriller "Final Girl," with Abigail Breslin.

LISA WEIDENFELD

Brenton Thwaites and Odeya Rush get close in the film "The Giver." / THE WEINSTEIN COMPANY

Interview. Author Lois Lowry approves of the long-delayed film adaptation of "The Giver."

The adaptation of the young adult novel "The Giver" has been a long time coming. Star Jeff Bridges optioned the rights for it 18 years ago, but it took a long time to get all the pieces in place. Author Lois Lowry says she doesn't mind, though: "Oddly, if they had been able to do it 18 years ago, it wouldn't have been as good. Jeff was too young to play the role and now he's terrific in it."

Lowry called Bridges' bond with star Brenton Thwaites "the closest" element in the film to how she imagined it would be when she first wrote the book. One change she likes? The greater role played by Meryl Streep's character, one of the authority figures called "Elders" who clashes with Bridges' Giver character. "She's so good, and it added the element of conflict between Jeff and Meryl's characters, which is not in the book, so it's a whole other level to the movie that I think works very well," says Lowry.

There are a few other changes, but Lowry says director Phillip Noyce often came to her with questions about the world of "The Giver," and at least one of her recommendations ended up in the film. He asked how the kids' rooms would be decorated, and Lowry's suggestion of a very practical periodic table of the elements poster appears in Jonah's little sister's room.

The other change she made? While watching the editor at work, she voiced her disapproval of a line, and the next time she saw the scene, it was gone. "It had the phrase 'swirling vortex' in it," she says, laughing. "I thought that was a horrible phrase."

Censorship

Hitting close to home

The book and the movie focus on the dangers of censorship, a subject Lowry says she's familiar with: Before she wrote "The Giver," she'd dealt with censorship challenges. Despite that, she says people who censor books have good intentions: "They want to protect their children." It's a slippery slope, though. Once "bad" things are taken out of books, good things disappear, too. "If you ... have no pain, no anguish in your lives anymore, you also lose art and music. All of those things that arise out of anguish, it's all gone," she says.

VILLAGE VISITS

Vuadomo is the smallest but most spectacular of the three villages — don't miss the hike to its secluded waterfall. / JANE BORDEN

Fiji. Island life here has changed little — and travelers are invited to enjoy the tranquility in a different way than you might expect.

Most native Fijians still live in villages, the kind led by chiefs, dotted by open-air homes and traipsed by roving bands of giggling children. And they welcome visitors.

The South Pacific nation of 322 islands (106 inhabited) — once infamous for cannibalizing vanquished warriors and uninformed missionaries — is now celebrated for its hospitality. When we visited, a man hauling freshly harvested sugarcane stopped us on a rural road and wanted to share a chunk of his harvest.

As happy as they are to have you, however, you can't just show up. Certain customs apply, and gifts are exchanged before entry is gained. But your resort, hotel or hostel will have a relationship with area villages and help you navigate a visit. Here are the three communities that we found quite welcoming.

This girl is learning to hand-fish for prawns from her mother.
JANE BORDEN

Getting there

- Fiji Airways offers direct flights to Nadi International Airport as well as domestic flights to most Fijian cities, including Savusavu just down the road from Koro Sun, and Suva near Nanuku.
- Island Hoppers puddle-jump to the Yasawa airstrip as well as Nanuku's private airstrip.
- Pacific Destinationz provides reliable ground transport on the two large islands.

Vuadomo, Vanua Levu near Pacific Harbor

Directions to this village, from what we gathered: After you pass the wild horses, take a left, drive through a shallow creek and then you'll see it nestled in the rainforest canopy. This was the most spectacular of the villages we visited as well as the smallest, with only 10 homes. The chief welcomed our guide, a staff member at Koro Sun Resort & Rainforest Spa (www.korosunresort.com), and this reporter into his home to accept our cava offering.

Then we wandered past the worn lali (a drum used for announcements) and through the one-room church before hiking to a towering waterfall that gushes cool water into a swimming hole. Bring your swimsuit.

Nakorovu, Viti Levu near the Coral Coast

When the van pulled up, children began shouting the name "Seru!" Seru, the activities director at Nanuku Resort & Spa Fiji (www.nanukufiji.com) and former trainer of the Fijian rugby team, is the son of Nakorovu's chief and grew up there. The gang ran alongside us down a muddy path to the banks of a creek, where a woman was catching prawns by hand with her daughter, which she does every day, to sell at a nearby market. (Nanuku can also lead a waterfall hike through Nakorovu.) As the van left the village, we were stopped again, this time by a man offering to crack fresh coconuts for us to drink. We happily obliged.

Bukama, Yasawa Island

On the high ground of this small, narrow island is a small school that also serves a neighboring village. Once a week, guests at Yasawa Island Resort & Spa (www.yasawa.com) are invited to meet the children. First, your guide will present the chief or his representative with cava (a nutty local root with a mild sedative quality), which you may share in a ceremonial drink. Then you'll head through the generator-powered village, past women weaving mats toward the bright schoolhouse. During our visit, the children took a break to perform several enthusiastic songs.

Back to school. A new look at ways to prevent (and help) college dropouts

A new study looks at what many college dropouts have in common. / FUSE

Tens of millions of adults in the United States are trapped in a vicious cycle: They are saddled with student debt but never earned a college degree. A recent study suggests some ways to keep new students from falling into this "educational limbo," as well as assist former students in getting out of it.

According to a report by the National Student Clearinghouse, 31 million Americans who enrolled in college over the past two decades dropped out without graduating. Of those former students, 4 million — or just over 12 percent — have finished two or more years of higher education.

Who are these Americans who have some college but no degree? According to the National Student Clearinghouse, most are over age 24, have dropped out and re-enrolled several times and were enrolled for more than one semester.

Doug Shapiro, executive research director of the National Student Clearinghouse, told U.S. News and World Report that the best way to prevent this situation would be to provide students with more flexibility in their financial aid packages. He suggests extending the time they can use the money they receive and using outreach programs to encourage students to stay in school.

The reports strike a hopeful note, saying that many former students can get back on track: "[They] need only a nudge or an opening to pick up where they left off, complete a degree and add to the nation's stock of educated adults." LIBBY DVIR

Some college, but no degree

The study found many of the American adults who attended college but didn't graduate share similarities. Most of them are:

- Over 24 years old
- Have dropped out and re-enrolled multiple times
- Have enrolled in more than one semester

WHEN SCHOOLS SAY THEY OFFER STUDENT SUPPORT, WHAT DO THEY MEAN?

It could mean a lot of different things. At Bay State College it means we understand that going back to school is a big decision. And, it means we understand your concerns about succeeding at the college level. That's why, regardless of how you see yourself doing in college, we see an opportunity to help you realize your potential with a community of support.

What else does it mean? It means that admissions counselors can show off our campus, answer your questions and guide you through our selection process—even before you apply. It means helping 95 percent of this year's freshman class receive grants or scholarships that don't have to be repaid. It means personal success coordinators and a closely-knit student body that can help make America's biggest college town feel a little more like home.

In the classroom, it means a wide variety of Associates and Bachelor's degree programs in such in-demand fields as healthcare, business, fashion, criminal justice and more. No matter which program you choose, it means learning in small classes from accessible professors with real-world experience in their field. To fit your schedule, it means making classes available at night or online.

As you advance toward your degree, it means having a personal career advancement team. It means helping you write cover letters and resumes, creating mock job interviews and using social media to help you get noticed. It means internships at some of Boston's best companies and organizations to build working relationships with people that can help you find a full-time position doing what you love.

In the end, what does it all mean? It means that at Bay State College, we care as much about your comfort as we do your success. It means we're committed to providing you unmatched student support throughout your college journey. It means that going back to school doesn't mean going it alone.

In short, it means Bay State is the right choice for you.

Unisex. More colleges are adding gender-neutral bathrooms on campus

More than 150 campuses across the country have at least one gender-neutral bathroom. / PHOTOS.COM

Northwestern University recently made headlines after announcing that it would be installing two gender-neutral bathrooms in the university's student center.

"These are two gender-open bathrooms where students of any gender can go in and use the restroom and feel safe, regardless of gender expression or gender identity," Michelle Margulis, the president of the campus LGBT group Rainbow Alliance, told CBS Chicago. The new bathrooms are expected to be ready before the start of the fall semester.

By the numbers

Campuses in the United States that have gender-neutral restrooms, according to the Stonewall Center at UMass Amherst

Some students are hoping other colleges will follow Northwestern's lead. Student activists at California State University, Chico helped pass a student government resolution last year that recommended that one single-stall bathroom in each campus building be declared gender-neutral. Oberlin College has applied a similar policy to its residential halls, designating one restroom in each dorm to be gender-neutral.

Over 150 campuses in the United States have gender-neutral restrooms, according to the Stonewall Center at the University of Massachusetts Amherst. The Transgender Law and Policy Institute notes that transgender students can be subject to harassment and violence while using gender-specific facilities.

Cambridge College is launching 3 new concentrations beginning in the Fall of 2014.

Are you interested in a career in mental health counseling? If so, now is a great time to begin your training. Within this expanding field, there are increasing opportunities to specialize. Cambridge College offers Master's degrees and Post-Master's Certificates of Advanced Graduate Studies towards mental health counseling licensure. Beginning in the fall of 2014, several new program concentrations are launching.

Rehabilitation Counseling
The aim of the Rehabilitation Counseling concentration is to allow you to become eligible for both Licensure in Mental Health Counseling (LMHC) and to simultaneously be trained in Rehabilitation Counseling, enabling you to pursue national Certification as a Rehabilitation Counselor and to be licensed in the state of Massachusetts as a Rehabilitation Counselor. This program ties together two fields, allowing you to comprehensively serve the needs of individuals returning to work, dealing with intellectual, emotional and/or physical challenges, veterans facing complex mental health and vocational rehabilitation issues, and those seeking to work in Employee Assistance Programs (EAP).

Pastoral Counseling
The new concentration in Pastoral Counseling is offered for those interested in developing the knowledge, skills and training needed to provide effective and informed counseling services from a spiritual and/or faith-based perspective. The program emphasizes inclusive, interfaith dialogue and cooperative and constructive interaction between individuals of different faiths and/or humanistic or spiritual beliefs. Through classroom experiences, you will develop a greater awareness of the role spirituality may play in your clients' lives, and a better understanding of the impact of spiritual and faith-based perspectives on the counseling process. Throughout the curriculum, you will have opportunities for reflective thought, applied learning, and personal and professional growth.

Holistic Counseling
The Holistic Counseling concentration is offered to students interested in exploring Eastern and Western as well as modern and ancient ways of understanding psychology and human behavior. The program aims to integrate knowledge from the study of three levels of experience: body, mind, and spirit. As a student, you will review traditional Western and Eastern ways of understanding, and will examine how different perspectives fit with new information emerging from neuroscience. In creating a holistic learning experience, you will develop an experiential practice (e.g. meditation, tai-chi or yoga) of your own to complement your academic work.

Now is the time to join the growing field of mental health counseling. With so many specialties to choose from, Cambridge College can help you create the career you want. Contact admissions to learn more, call 800-829-4723 or email info@cambridgecollege.edu today!

You have got to be kidding me! For two weeks we had to hear and see video evidence of police apparently placing a chokehold on the 31-times arrested, obese Eric Garner, who should have known the drill and not resisted his 30-second arrest. We were told this is documented evidence. In Ferguson, video evidence is released displaying Michael Brown terrorizing a store owner and stealing cigars. This is not being viewed by the community as documented evidence but character assassination. Have no fear, Al Sharpton is going to Ferguson and I'm sure everything will calm down due to his presence. There cannot be a double standard.

Get word out on suicide prevention

It's hard to think about Robin Williams without smiling. His energy, his intelligence and his humor were so profound and his death brings a sadness equally as profound. Robin Williams battled depression and substance abuse. Many others facing the same struggles succumb to the same outcome. Suicide is the leading cause of death for people with mental illness; some even refer to suicide as "death from mental illness." While we mourn his loss, we hope his story is not lost on the millions of other Americans who suffer in silence. We must look carefully at those around us, and inside ourselves, to see if there are warning signs. Most people who commit suicide don't want to die; they just want to stop the pain.

Sox have uneven issues to address

MLB. Boston's batting order may look the same next season, but its rotation is far from set for 2015.

David Ortiz is nearly certain to once again be in the heart of the Red Sox batting order when the 2015 season begins next April. / GETTY IMAGES

When the Red Sox traded Jon Lester and Jonny Gomes to the Athletics they received one of the best power-hitting outfielders in the game in Yoenis Cespedes, but there was no question the organization was readying themselves for 2015.

With Dustin Pedroia, David Ortiz, Mike Napoli and Xander Bogaerts already on board for the foreseeable future, Boston's batting lineup is pretty well set for next season.

"A lot of the guys that are now on this roster will more than likely be on the roster next April, so we've got to start building a team that can win," general manager Ben Cherington said after making four trades on July 31.

While the lineup has some certainty, the pitching rotation is in flux.

Four of the five starters to open the 2014 season were traded and the only one remaining is Clay Buchholz — who has the second-highest ERA in baseball this year (minimum 100 innings) at 5.79.

Without any clear-cut top-of-the-line rotation pitcher, it's clear the organization will be active in the free agent or trade market in search of that type of pitcher this offseason.

The likes of Lester, Max Scherzer, Johnny Cueto and James Shields are the type of players that could be added for the right price.

The No. 4 and 5 spots remain in question with the final month and a half of the season playing a major role in who those spots will go to based on the performances of the younger starters currently with the team.

Rubby De La Rosa has shown flashes of being a serviceable major league starter having given up one run or less in six of his 12 starts, but he's also had some bad outings mixed in too where he struggles with his control.

Allen Webster has big league stuff, but he's still trying to find it in the majors as he has a 4.79 ERA in four starts in 2014.

Brandon Workman, a mainstay in the bullpen during last year's World Series title run, is another option but he is 1-6 with a 4.45 ERA this season.

Current minor leaguers Anthony Ranaudo (2-0 in two big league starts), Matt Barnes and top prospect Henry Owens could also be in the discussion as well.

While the Red Sox are 56-67, 14 1/2 games out for first place in the AL East, there is still plenty of reason to tune into games as jobs for 2015 will be won and lost.

Silly putty

Clay Buchholz has been one of the more inconsistent pitchers in Red Sox history.

- Buchholz won 17 games in 2010 and had a 2.33 ERA in 28 games played that year.
- The righty went 12-1 and had a 1.74 ERA last season before a shaky 2013 postseason.
- Buchholz is 5-7 this season with a 5.79 ERA.

Bradley Jr. demoted, Betts called up

Jackie Bradley Jr. had his best offensive day in nearly a month Sunday against the Astros, registering two hits and drawing a walk, but Red Sox management had evidently seen enough of the center fielder's overall struggles at the plate as they demoted the 24-year-old to Triple-A Pawtucket on Monday. Mookie Betts was called up to the big league club. Bradley Jr. just recently broke an 0-for-35 hitless streak and was batting .216 on the season.

Mayo, Stork back at Pats practice

Patriots linebacker Jerod Mayo missed practice all of last week for undisclosed reasons but he was back in Foxboro for a full-pads session on Monday, according to ESPNBoston.com. Rookie center Bryan Stork, who was also out for a period of time due to an undisclosed injury, also returned. Mayo suffered a season-ending pectoral injury in Week 6 last year against New Orleans. Fanny pack day at Fenway

Both NESN and CSN Houston got a chance to interview movie star Matthew McConaughey in the stands at Fenway Park on Sunday, but it was the Texas sports station that got the real dirt on the actor. When asked why he was wearing a "fanny pack," to the game McConaughey stated, "I'm not afraid of the fanny pack. You just gotta put it on the side to make it look a little [less] nerdy."
